Minister allows wild boars in Denmark to be shot

Minister of Environment and Food, Esben Lunde Larsen has permitted for wild boar in Danish nature to be shot.

"Wild boars spread swine fever and therefore they must go away. They can be infected by eating food residue from swine fever countries. For example, at rest stop areas where drivers eat food that they have brought from infected areas. And then the wild boars infects each other. Therefore, they must go away", says Esben Lunde Larsen.

"There are staggering wild boars in the Danish countryside, especially in southern Jutland. One wild boar has been run down in southern Jutland. Fortunately, the minister has now allowed them to be shot because it will be completely unimaginable if there is swine fever to Denmark. It will cost billions because some countries do not want to import our pork, "says chairman of Danish pig producers, Henrik Mortensen.

Swine fever spreads in Europe to the west through Poland and was most recently also found in the Czech Republic. Wild boars are widespread south of the Danish-German border.
